THE hitherto honourable and extensive patronage which the Editor of the COURT and COUNTRY GUIDE has experienced, amidst his zealous efforts to supply the fashionable Circle (for whom it is particularly designed) with information not trivial in its nature, may, without vanity, be urged as justifying the production of a new Edition for 1800; and in addition to his former exertions, he has added this year the Names of professional and other Gentlemen residing in the Inns of Court; a List of which is added to the Index of the Streets, and the Names of the Inhabitants, with their different professions, numerically arranged.

If before it was defective, either in accuracy or copiousness, he trusts that his present large and unexpected resources have placed within his power the sure means of imparting a more decisive finishing to correctness, and giving a still greater accumulation to abundance.

The Streets are first arranged in regular order, with the addition of the Inns of Court, and the inhabitants of rank and character in each street pointed out, according to the numbers of their respective houses; so as to present at one view the various circles of fashion, and the extent of each vicinity. Thus, a reference to a street would bring any particular name in an instant to recollection, or would inform a stranger going to reside there what persons he was to have for his neighbours.

The names of those who move in the fashionable courts of law, &c. will be found alphabetically arranged with the town and country residence (if any) immediately after each name. By this addition, the uncertainty and confusion arising from a similarity of names will be avoided; whereas the seats of each respective family will be ascertained and recognised in a manner sufficiently copious and discriminating. Therefore, persons who wish to visit or correspond with them, when they are absent from the metropolis, will have the most certain and permanent address.

P. BOYLE has used every effort to correct those defects, to supply omissions, and to enlarge, as well as improve, the original plan; and though, in this edition, his expences have been considerably increased, by the addition of nearly 2000 names of Gentlemen of the law and others resident in the different Inns of Court, he notwithstanding the rise of 50 per cent. upon paper, has not advanced the price; in order to keep up a sort of laudable contest between his liberality of a generous Publisher.

Court-Guide and General Printing-office,
Vine-street, Piccadilly.
Jan. 30, 1800.

* * Communications respecting changes of residence, omissions, &c. sent (post paid) to P. BOYLE, No. 14, Vine-street, will be esteemed a favour, and shall meet with every attention.
